Photographing Action in The City

Topic

Award-winning photographer Lewis Bogaty is most at home photographing the world in motion, whether birds in flight, wild horses, trains, or the swirl of city activity. His most recent project has been photographing the story of pandemic life in New York City.

In the June 24th program, Photographing Action In The City, he will discuss his techniques and tips for capturing the vibrant life of the city, on the street, in jazz clubs, as well as at such uniquely New York events as the 1930s dress-up subway rides and the Halloween Parade. The program will include information on equipment and settings.

Bio

Lewis Bogaty's photographs have appeared in the New York Times and other newspapers, and on the covers and pages of magazines and corporate catalogs.
